

How long will this last?

The most common question an astrologer is asked is not "what am I like?" It is "how long will this last?"

Vedic astrology has a beautiful answer. A life is not one long road. It moves in seasons, each run by one of the nine planets for a fixed number of years, in a fixed order, and the season you are born into depends on where the Moon stood the night you arrived. Astrologers call it the dasha system. This book calls it what it is: the seasons of your life.

Written entirely in plain English, with every Sanskrit word explained once and then set aside, Your Life in Seasons walks you through all nine seasons and the sub-seasons inside them, shows you how to find where you are, and tells you, kindly and specifically, what each season tends to ask of you and what to do about it. Three worked lives show the whole method, and a cast of comic-strip planets keeps you company along the way.

A hard season is a season with a task, not a verdict. By the last page you will have drawn your own season map and will know, roughly, how long the weather will hold.

Anushka Bharti is a practising astrologer and the author of Astrology, Gently. Your Life in Seasons is the second book in the series.
